Find out more This is my farm. I only use wheat for demonstration purposes because it shows a percentage of how much it has grown. Here I have an inventory check that checks if the machine already has a watering can inside it. If it has one, it displays a redstone signal that switches the exporter. Here you can see the configuration of the Checker inventory. Here's inside the mechanical users. It is configured to use the watering can on the blocks in front of it using the right click. On top of that, I have which puts a full irrigation cans on it. This is my tank. That's how I refill watering cans. The Mekanism pump sends water through the immersion of engineering liquid pipes into the tank. (It's a GUI, he recently topped up the irrigation cans so it was low in water) Here I have an exporter who takes empty watering cans that extract and throws them into the tank. Here I have an importer who takes full irrigation boxes out of the tank and puts them in mechanical users. It's got to work, doesn't it? It is able to maintain watering cans always full, so with water on them is not a problem. 24,160 ARTICLES ON THIS WIKI Theoretical Infinite Water Source is a point added by the mystical fashion of agriculture.
